In UD’s campus, there is definitely a struggle with apathy. Not everybody engages in these reflective spaces. But having more of them and bringing them to the forefront of our campuses’ advertisements—where this is where you can speak about yourself and learn more about others—is so crucial in fighting that apathy. I felt like using my voice with that platform would allow people to expand their understanding of the world and potentially self. People actually caring about my difficult and empowering experiences and how I translated that to them through the essay really meant a lot to me in understanding where I fit and where I’m valued.
